

UPGRADING CELLULAR TELEPHONES

Abstract of the Disclosure

A cellular telephone may be equipped with a compartment that slidingly receives upgrade modules, such as PC or memory cards. The modules may provide added functionality, such as wireless Ethernet connection, additional memory, pre-programmed memory, additional processing, better displays, and the like. By simply unplugging an existing card from its compartment and inserting in its place a new card, upgraded features may be pluggingly provided to cellular telephones.